Target Information

Mouse F-box and Leucine Rich Repeat Protein 3 (FBXL3) is a key component of the ubiquitin-proteasome system, involved in protein degradation and cellular regulation. It plays a crucial role in controlling the stability of various target proteins, thereby influencing g cell cycle progression, signal transduction, and metabolic pathways. FBXL3 is essential for maintaining cellular homeostasis and is implicated in diverse biological processes, including development and immune response. Its precise function and regulation make it a valuable target for understanding fundamental cellular mechanisms and potential therapeutic interventions.
